The newsletter of Cape Mentelle, Margaret River, Australia | ISSN: 2207-6964

A sheltered cove on Margaret River's captivating coastline.

Sauvignon by the Sea

Cape Mentelle was named after a French geographer, a legacy definitively expressed by Cape Mentelle's signature white wine, Wallcliffe Sauvignon Blanc Semillon.

Unlike the Bordeaux region, Margaret River boasts just one river that meets the Indian Ocean at Surfers Point, north of Prevelly Beach where renowned waves break upon the rugged West Australian shoreline that extends from Cape Naturaliste to Cape Leeuwin.

Those waves and the associated maritime influences are pivotal, not just to Margaret River's evolution as a wine region, but also to the creation of its classic Sauvignon Blanc Semillon white blends, unashamedly inspired by Bordeaux's 'Entre-Deux-Mers' crisp whites.

We can thank viticultural scientist Dr John Gladstones for showing the way forward. His original research, published in the mid-1960s, unquestionably put Margaret River on the world wine map, 'Being virtually frost-free, and having a much lower ripening period, cloudiness, rainfall and hail risk than Manjimup and Mount Barker, it has distinct advantages over both those areas, and indeed over all other Australian vine districts with comparable temperature summations.

Not only should excellent quality be obtainable with choice grape varieties, but the district might also be very suitable because of its equable climate for higher-yielding, but still good quality varieties, such as shiraz and semillon.'

'Margaret River has distinct advantages over all other Australian vine districts...' DR JOHN GLADSTONES

Founder David Hohnen took his cue from Gladstones and in the mid-1970s planted both semillon and sauvignon blanc on the original 16-hectare Cape Mentelle Wallcliffe vineyard adjacent to the winery. The first white blend was made in 1980, predominantly semillon and chenin blanc. Back then Hohnen described it as 'the red drinker's white'. By 1983 he was adding sauvignon blanc, co-fermenting and ageing two months in new French oak – and edging ever closer to the classic Bordeaux Entre-Deux-Mers style.

Roll forward 31 years to the new release Cape Mentelle Wallcliffe Sauvignon Blanc Semillon 2014 a timeless classic blend that is now 62% old vine sauvignon blanc and 38% semillon. Think rockmelon, dried figs, pink grapefruit, crusty sourdough and an appealing briny flintiness...Add three years bottle age to conjure balance and complexity, then chill and relish this wine's finesse, the legacy of three decades of winemaking.

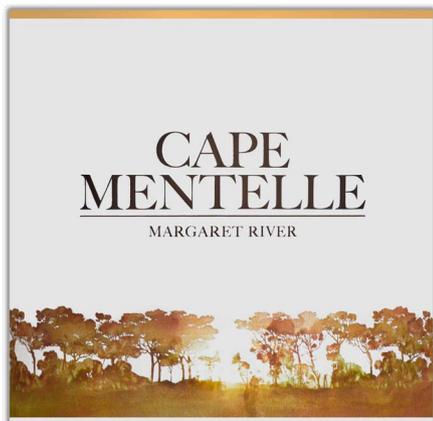

The predecessor 2013 vintage was rated 96 Points by James Halliday who wrote: 'A power of flavour and scorching length.'

An emphatic release, sophisticated and simply delicious'.

Halliday's praise endorses Estate Director Cameron Murphy's belief that 30-plus years have combined to create Cape Mentelle's renowned classic white blend – internationally synonymous with Margaret River and Cape Mentelle.

Margaret River doesn't have an appellation scheme but if it did this wine would surely be worthy of the citation 'Margaret River Superieur'. Bien sûr...

CAPE MENTELLE WALLCLIFFE SAUVIGNON BLANC SEMILLON 2014

A timeless blend taking inspiration from the great whites of Bordeaux...

‘Very light hay with green hues. Classic nose yet already intense and complex with notes of cassis, rockmelon, dried figs and moist leaves with notable flintiness. The generous palate reveals delicate crusty bread characters supported by pink grapefruit, which carries through to the long, lingering finish. The natural fresh acidity, balanced by the wine’s tactile texture and complexity, will conjure even more complexity with additional ageing.’

CAPE MENTELLE WALLCLIFFE CABERNET CABERNET FRANC 2014

Not produced every vintage – but worth waiting for! This red blend is made predominantly from Cabernet Sauvignon and Cabernet Franc (with 5% portions of Shiraz and Merlot) from the original Wallcliffe Vineyard, another wine that draws comparisons with Bordeaux tradition.

‘Top notes of juicy cranberries and red fruit compote from selected parcels of old vine Cabernet Franc marry with comforting warm spices and hints of apple-wood smoke from the Cabernet. Deep and dark, this medium-bodied red transports you from plum pudding and nutmeg to a smoky, silky balanced mid-palate, a legacy of the excellent 2014 vintage. Generous and round, intense with notes of dried flowers, chocolate, coffee and pipe tobacco. Gentle oak frames the wine without austerity, leading to a long velvety finish.’

CAPE MENTELLE ZINFANDEL 2015

One of the icons of the Cape Mentelle portfolio – with Californian origins. Planted in 1974, these mature low-yielding over 40-year-old vines produce intense wines displaying great depth and balance.

‘Deeply coloured with highlight tints of youthful garnet. The appealing rich texture is amplified by bright red ripe fruit flavours that lead to an opulent balanced, big rich smooth palate with long silky, chocolatey tannins. The finish draws on persistent notes of coffee and spiced pannacotta.’

Myths and Marvels

ABC Radio's science guru Robyn Williams pulls the cork on early scientific discoveries and Australia's capacity for invention.

I was in Chiantishire, just north of Sienna, where the classic Italian red is said to have been invented. Baron Bettino Ricasoli worked on its composition for 30 years and, in 1872, settled on a formula that we now know as Chianti Classico. If you climb the battlements of his great castle at Brolio you can look down on the divine vista of vineyards stretching to the hills of a sublime Tuscan landscape.

'Oenological innovation is something we are good at'

We were staying at Borgo San Felice close by, an entire exquisite medieval village transformed into a hotel-resort with its own wines and cellar. Great barrels stood in the silence and we spoke in hushed voices. Our guide, a young Italian woman who had worked in wineries in Australia, pointed to the top of the barrels and asked, 'Who d'you think invented those glass devices up there, keeping air out but balancing the gas pressures?'

Some questions warrant a clever-sticks guess so I offered 'Leonardo!' 'Yes,' she exclaimed 'Leonardo da Vinci hundreds of years ago'. Since then I've asked the odd expert to confirm the legend and some have nodded vaguely and agreed.

Next I asked Dr Google and found, eventually, a piece by Laura Gray The Truth about Airlocks saying – not so. The technology was thought up in 1827 (the year Beethoven died) and published in a Tuscan agricultural journal.

For this and many other reasons I've always been uneasy about oenological facts. What I do know, is that two Vice Chancellors in Australia are deeply knowledgeable about wine: Peter Hoj from University of Queensland and Nobel Laureate Brian Schmidt from ANU. The latter has his own pinot noir plantation near Canberra.

Of course, they know that alcohol is produced by yeasts that consume the sugars in fruit. And also that we owe our taste for wine to apes. According to the cover story of National Geographic (Birth of Booze, 2017) some of our ape ancestors developed a taste for fermented fruit found on the forest floor and enjoyed its nutritional, antiseptic and mind-massaging qualities. Author Nathaniel Dominy says we owe those apes big-time, for we are 'pre-adapted for consuming alcohol'.

And that adaptation started a long time ago. A kind of wine was produced in China 9000 years ago and the wine grape itself is thought to have originated from Georgia, near the Caucasus. The Romans loved a drop and other Europeans favoured wines and other alcoholic drinks, not least because they were safer than water, which often carried vile disease.

Enter Governor Phillip who brought vine cuttings to Australia on the First Fleet in 1788. They flourished from the Hunter to the Barossa to establish Australia's wine industry. Nowadays climate change and global warming is forcing re-evaluation of these historic areas, with some vineyards relocating to Tasmania. Just one case of lateral thinking and oenological innovation, something we are good at.

Australia has led the way when it comes to wine inventions. Just look at the list on the Australian Wine Research Institute website: stainless steel receiving vats (1948); Bag-in-the-box packaging patent (1956) launched into wine shops (1965); first botrytis sweetened Australian semillon (1962); drip irrigation (1970s); first DNA cloning experiments (1973); screw caps (out in the 1980s, back in the 1990s). Now the Institute is experimenting with yeasts, enzymes, grafting, energy-saving techniques, watering and harvesting technologies.

We may have been relatively late starters (the Romans experimented with barrels 2000 years ago) in the scientific innovation stakes, but we have surely made our vinous mark.

One puzzle, though, that's beyond me. Why is the shape of the glass so important? And why am I now supposed to reject flutes for champagne? OK, so a bigger glass is now recommended by schnozzle scientists and sommeliers. That, wine friends, is simply perfection beyond my competence.

One last piece of technological brilliance shows how sophisticated Australian science has become. Tanya Monroe, Pro-Vice Chancellor (Research) at the University South Australia, has developed a photonic sniffer that can assess the constitution of fuel in a jet plane tank and the safety of baby foods in containers. It has now been adapted to test wines, by insinuating tiny tubes into the bottle or barrel without opening them and spoiling the wine. Not Leonardo, but close.

Robyn Williams presents the ABC Science Show. He holds several honorary doctorates and is a fellow of the Australian Academy of Science. His love of wine has never veiled his pursuit of scientific discovery.

CELLARING NOTES

This year the cellar door crew has taken on the task of reviewing the past eight vintages of selected cellar-worthy Cape Mentelle wines. These notes represent their unexpurgated frank assessments of four flagship Cape Mentelle wines – two whites, two reds – intended to guide you in the careful management of your Cape Mentelle collection.

Your favourite wine may have scored a lower rating than you expect. Rest assured we do open extra bottles if a wine seems not to be showing as we expect, but ultimately these notes are a fearless assessment of each wine in the glass on the day. No ratings are based on prior tastings or reputation – meaning we are tough and true markers! We hope you find these Cellaring Notes useful in maintaining your precious cellar.

French Connection

Introducing two integral members of the Cape Mentelle winemaking team.

Since its inception Cape Mentelle has had French connections. The company name for a start, which originates from the Baudin Expedition of 1801. That voyage was charted by the Mentelle brothers who lived in Paris – one a geographer, the other a cartographer. They left their mark.

Roll forward to 2014 when winemaker Frederique Perrin was appointed Cape Mentelle’s Technical Director. Born in France and with a Degree in Agricultural Engineering and Masters in Oenology from Montpellier, Frederique previously helped put the elegant bubbles into Krug Champagne. But she always hankered for the southwest of WA, back since her very first overseas vintage there in 1999.

Numerous years later after stints at Terrazas de los Andes and California’s Newton Vineyard, the opportunity arose to lead the Cape Mentelle team, where she is responsible for both viticulture and winemaking.

Her passion is Chardonnay, and the latest release Cape Mentelle Chardonnay is a definitive expression of her affinity for the variety.

Frederique is assisted by Associate Winemaker, Coralie Lewis. She too was trained in France, studying in Bordeaux and working at Chateaux Cheval Blanc and Beychevelle. So no guesses – Coralie’s passion is Cabernet Sauvignon. Next year will be her fourth vintage at Cape Mentelle, but tenth in the region, where she lives with her Australian husband and young family.

These two talented winemakers were till recently supported by Assistant Viticulturist Pauline Castagnie, whose work at Cape Mentelle focused on the potential of exceptional intra-block terroir for Cabernet Sauvignon reported in the previous MN issue. Accomplished vintners all.

Yet there is nothing especially new about women in wine. Just think back to Madame Clicquot, and her great aptitude for marketing, and her bubbly neighbour, Madame Lily Bollinger, whose passions were summed up in that famous quote about drinking Champagne.

It’s an exhortation that savvy marketers could cheekily modify to read... ‘I drink Cape Mentelle when I’m happy and when I’m sad...’ These famous trail-blazing, sparkling women, mesdames Clicquot and Bollinger would surely agree.

Eat In with Anna Gare

Local West Australian TV chef Anna Gare has chosen a hearty winter dish featuring local produce to match the new Cape Mentelle Wallcliffe Cabernet Cabernet Franc 2014. First pour a glass for the cook...

As a lover of fresh local produce I support the “Buy West Eat Best” campaign, a no-brainer for me. Buying West supports WA farmers and producers, helps our economy, has a lower carbon footprint and delivers seasonal fresh food.

This stunning aromatic hot pot is simple, delicious and features Mount Barker chicken, Linley Valley pork, Lake Deborah salt and locally grown spices from Whittington’s.

National Heroes

The London Australia Day Tasting is a long-standing tradition started by the nation's global marketers at Wine Australia. It is an unashamedly nationalistic celebration of the very best of Australian wine, held with considerable fanfare.

This flagship event has been held for many years and is a pivotal showcase for Australia's prestige wines and their makers. This year over 1100 wines from 230 wineries were poured. Not an event for faint-hearted palates.

Among the exhibitors was Cape Mentelle, represented by Estate Director Cameron Murphy, who poured the latest releases for an enthusiastic throng of British wine trade and wine media.

According to Wine Australia's Laura Jewell MW the tasting really 'highlights the diversity of Australian wine and reinforces the country's reputation as a premium wine producer'. And too, we trust, the reputation of the mighty wines from Margaret River.

A similar Wine Australia showcase rolled into Dallas, Chicago and New York recently, monickered 'Australia Up Close' and Cameron Murphy was there again, putting Cape Mentelle's best bottles forward.

He reports renewed US interest in Margaret River wines and growing awareness of regionality. Masterclasses and focused varietal tastings highlighted the breadth and depth of what Australian wine regions can offer.

Over the last three years US imports of Cape Mentelle have quadrupled to become our largest overseas market. And that cheeky white classic blend Cape Mentelle Sauvignon Blanc Semillon is one ambassador keenly leading the charge.

Spot Cameron! He's talking to the Wine Detective Sarah Ahmed, also a panellist for Decanter.

Croatian Claim

It hasn't caused an international crisis – yet. But there may be rumblings if the Croatian wine sector has its way and insists that the variety otherwise known fondly as Zinfandel or Primitivo, is renamed Tribidrag.

According to the proud Croats, Tribidrag is an almost forgotten indigenous grape variety that was re-discovered when American scientists decided to probe the DNA of Zinfandel. Their research took them to vineyards in Dalmatia and Montenegro and the agriculture department at Zagreb University.

Genetic analyses have shown close links between Tribidrag, Plavac Mali, Primitivo and the original Zin, a variety that the Croats claim dates back to the 15th century in Dalmatia.

At a recent international conference called to ponder the conundrum, Jancis Robinson MW decreed that 'priority rights' should rule – that is, the oldest variety name should prevail. Such viticultural nomenclature changes usually take time to evolve, so in the meantime Cape Mentelle Zin stays as it is. Out there and proud of its European lineage dating back six centuries.

To be or not to be – Cape Mentelle Zinfandel lines up in Croatia.

Milestone Year

Those with a penchant for anniversaries may be aware that 2017 marks the 50th Anniversary of the foundation of the Margaret River wine region. The earliest vineyards were mostly established by enterprising doctors, men who chose to cultivate grazing land and plant vines.

Cape Mentelle was founded in 1970 but that interval does not prevent our celebration of the district's long and illustrious history. Various activities are planned by the Margaret River Wine Association, including the '50 Years in the Making' Decade Tastings (16 November) which will feature comprehensive masterclass reviews of the region's champion varieties – Chardonnay and Cabernet Sauvignon.

The Margaret River Collaborative Cabernet Cuvée Gala Dinner and Auction (18 November), one of the headline events of the 2017 Gourmet Escape program, will be prepared by five local chefs featuring local produce. One Auction highlight will be the Collaborative Cabernet Cuvée, a single hero wine from collective parcels of top quality cabernet grapes. Vintage 2017 Cabernet En Primeur lots will also be offered.

Join in the celebrations! More information: amanda@margaretriver.wine

Mountain High

The Mentelle Ambassador program re-launched late last year. Already it has drawn several captivating photo entries from Cape Mentelle fans who have packed a bottle in their luggage or spotted Cape Mentelle wines in far flung places – then taken a selfie and posted on social media or submitted to the winery for consideration.

Every issue of Mentelle Notes publishes the winning ambassadorial photo – an image that best captures the essence of this global roaming program.

To get readers into the swing of the happy-snap program we decided to introduce you to Wenping who popped her bottle of Cape Mentelle Zinfandel on the parapet at the world's highest winery, Ao Yun near Shangri-La in Yunnan Province, China, where she works.

Ao Yun means 'flying above the clouds' and Wenping literally does because the winery sits at 2,200 metres on the lower slopes of the Tibetan Himalayas, under Meili Snow Mountain.

For your chance to be appointed an official Mentelle Ambassador, all you need to do is take a photo of yourself, colleagues, family or friends enjoying Cape Mentelle wine in exotic or unusual places. Then post using #capementelle or #mentelleambassador or link directly to www.facebook.com/capementelle or link directly to www.facebook.com/capementelle You can also email photos to: info@capementelle.com.au Ensure your image quality is at least one megabyte.

All photos will be reviewed and a winning image chosen each month. The prize is a Six-Pack Selection of current releases sent via Australia Post Wine Service to your nominated Australian address.

BACK VINTAGE Monty Returns

Star-billing at the recent Margaret River Writers' Festival went to globetrotter author Michael Palin, a man of refined pen and palate. His visit caused some ruffling through the Mentelle Notes archives, back in fact to July 1998, when Michael Palin was MN's cover boy.

We know he is still an avowed chardonnay fan and we are sure he won't mind this revival of his original bon mots, largely directed at wine waiters.

'Wine is all about mental notes. They're what you mean to scribble down, and never do, as a particularly noteworthy bottle is whisked away from the table.'

One of the things I like least about restaurant wine service is the tendency to keep the identity of the bottle you've chosen a closely guarded secret. The wine list is wrenched from your grasp as soon as the choice has been made and the bottle is either wrapped in a napkin (old-fashioned but still a feature of posh places) or grasped so firmly by the waiter you need to prise fingers apart to catch a glimpse of the label.'

I think it's time to redress the balance. Time to take a Blair-ite Third Way-ist approach and devolve power from the sommelier back to the customer. So waiters, no hiding bottles away, no cork sniffing, none of those baskets that make the bottle look as if it's a sick dog on the way to the vet...'

Nearly 20 years later Blair's Third-Way has evolved to Mrs May's Brexit exit and other unexpected outcomes. Wine waiters are now credentialed sommeliers that 'curate' lists, and those wicker baskets have long gone to the school fete. But good chardonnay still rules the world. Just ask Michael Palin.

94 POINTS Campbell Mattinson, WINEFRONT

CAPE MENTELLE CABERNET SAUVIGNON 2014

'...A serious wine all-round. Full-bodied and very concentrated, profoundly flavoured and structured, masses of tannin and a terrifically long finish. Powerfully built cabernet of outstanding potential. A great wine – possibly the best yet from Cape Mentelle.'

98 POINTS Huon Hooke, THE REAL REVIEW

'Blackberry and blueberry aromas with wet earth and bark. Sandalwood undertones. Full body, velvety tannins and a juicy finish. Very agile at the same time. Energy. What a wine for the cellar.'
